

March 25, 2020

To our customers and associates,

The global spread of COVID-19 presents yet another challenge for farmers and for the entire world. We at Stoller stand with you and support you in working through the extraordinary circumstances of this global health crisis. Although there are a lot of uncertainties right now, one thing that we know for a fact is that U.S. farmers will not stop in their plans to put out a crop this year. They've dealt with challenges before, and they will overcome this too with faith, hard work and commitment. Their work is vital to the economy and to the world as they provide food for all of us.

Internally, we have implemented the necessary measures to ensure business continuity in our operations at our Houston, Cedar Rapids, and Eustis production facilities. I thank everyone at Stoller for their continued commitment and dedication as we continue to support our customers and the farmers they serve.

The American farmer is not new to unique challenges and we want to assure them that we are here to help them as they grow their crops and do everything necessary to feed the world in 2020 and beyond. We are proud to partner with you in this effort and we thank you for your hard work and tenacity.

We are here and ready to assist with your crops this season.
